Preamble

THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty establishing the European Community, and in particular Article 62, point para. (2)(b)(i) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal from the Commission,*

Having regard to the opinion of the European Parliament,

Whereas:

(1) Under Article 62, point para. (2)(b) of the Treaty, the Council is to adopt rules relating to visas for intended stays of no more than three months, and in that context it is required to determine the list of those third countries whose nationals must be in possession of visas when crossing the external borders and those whose nationals are exempt from that requirement. Article 61 cites those lists among the flanking measures which are directly linked to the free movement of persons in an area of freedom, security and justice.

(2) This Regulation follows on from the Schengen acquis in accordance with the Protocol integrating it into the framework of the European Union, hereinafter referred to as the “Schengen Protocol”. It does not affect Member States’ obligations deriving from the acquis as defined in Annex A to Decision 1999/435/EC of 20 May 1999 concerning the definition of the Schengen acquis for the purpose of determining, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Treaty establishing the European Community and the Treaty on European Union, the legal basis for each of the provisions or decisions which constitute the acquis.

(3) This Regulation constitutes the further development of those provisions in respect of which closer cooperation has been authorised under the Schengen Protocol and falls within the area referred to in Article 1, point B, of Decision 1999/437/EC of 17 May 1999 on certain arrangements for the application of the Agreement concluded by the Council of the European Union and the Republic of Iceland and the Kingdom of Norway concerning the association of those two States with the implementation, application and development of the Schengen acquis.

(4) Pursuant to Article 1 of the Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, Ireland and the United Kingdom are not participating in the adoption of this Regulation. Consequently and without prejudice to Article 4 of the aforementioned Protocol, the provisions of this Regulation apply neither to Ireland nor to the United Kingdom.

(5) The determination of those third countries whose nationals are subject to the visa requirement, and those exempt from it, is governed by a considered, case-by-case assessment of a variety of criteria relating inter alia to illegal immigration, public policy and security, and to the European Union’s external relations with third countries, consideration also being given to the implications of regional coherence and reciprocity. Provision should be made for a Community mechanism enabling this principle of reciprocity to be implemented if one of the third countries included in Annex I to this Regulation decides to make the nationals of one or more Member States subject to the visa obligation.

(6) As the Agreement on the European Economic Area exempts nationals of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway from the visa requirement, these countries are not included in the list in Annex II hereto.

(7) As regards stateless persons and recognised refugees, without prejudice to obligations under international agreements signed by the Member States and in particular the European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, signed at Strasbourg on 20 April 1959, the decision as to the visa requirement or exemption should be based on the third country in which these persons reside and which issued their travel documents. However, given the differences in the national legislation applicable to stateless persons and to recognised refugees, Member States may decide whether these categories of persons shall be subject to the visa requirement, where the third country in which these persons reside and which issued their travel documents is a third country whose nationals are exempt from the visa requirement.

(8) In specific cases where special visa rules are warranted, Member States may exempt certain categories of persons from the visa requirement or impose it on them in accordance with public international law or custom.

(9) With a view to ensuring that the system is administered openly and that the persons concerned are informed, Member States should communicate to the other Member States and to the Commission the measures which they take pursuant to this Regulation. For the same reasons, that information should also be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

(10) The conditions governing entry into the territory of the Member States or the issue of visas do not affect the rules currently governing recognition of the validity of travel documents.

(11) In accordance with the principle of proportionality stated in Article 5 of the Treaty, enacting a Regulation listing the third countries whose nationals must be in possession of visas when crossing the external borders, and those whose nationals are exempt from that requirement, is both a necessary and an appropriate means of ensuring that the common visa rules operate efficiently.

(12) This Regulation provides for full harmonisation as regards the third countries whose nationals are subject to the visa requirement for the crossing of Member States’ external borders, and those whose nationals are exempt from that requirement.

HAS ADOPTED THIS REGULATION:

CHAPTER I
General provisions

Article 1
1. Nationals of third countries on the list in Annex I shall be required to be in possession of a visa when crossing the external borders of the Member States.

Without prejudice to the requirements stemming from the European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees signed at Strasbourg on 20 April 1959, recognised refugees and stateless persons shall be required to be in possession of a visa when crossing the external borders of the Member States if the third country in which they are resident and which has issued them with their travel document is a third country listed in Annex I to this Regulation.

2. Nationals of third countries on the list in Annex II shall be exempt from the requirement set out in paragraph 1 for stays of no more than three months in all.

The following shall also be exempt from the visa requirement:
— the nationals of third countries listed in Annex I to this Regulation who are holders of a local border traffic card issued by the Member States pursuant to Regulation (EC) No 1931/2006 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 20 December 2006 laying down rules on local border traffic at the external land borders of the Member States and amending the provisions of the Schengen Convention when these holders exercise their right within the context of the Local Border Traffic regime;
— school pupils who are nationals of a third country listed in Annex I and who reside in a Member State applying Council Decision 94/795/JHA of 30 November 1994 on a joint action adopted by the Council on the basis of Article K.3.2.b of the Treaty on European Union concerning travel facilities for school pupils from third countries resident in a Member State and are travelling in the context of a school excursion as members of a group of school pupils accompanied by a teacher from the school in question;
— recognised refugees and stateless persons and other persons who do not hold the nationality of any country who reside in a Member State and are holders of a travel document issued by that Member State.

3. Nationals of new third countries formerly part of countries on the lists in Annexes I and II shall be subject respectively to the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 unless and until the Council decides otherwise under the procedure laid down in the relevant provision of the Treaty.

4. Where a third country listed in Annex II introduces a visa requirement for nationals of a Member State, the following provisions shall apply:
(a) within 90 days of such introduction, or its announcement, the Member State concerned shall notify the Council and the Commission in writing; the notification shall be published in the C series of the Official Journal of the European Union. The notification shall specify the date of implementation of the measure and the type of travel documents and visas concerned.

If the third country decides to lift the visa obligation before the expiry of this deadline, the notification becomes superfluous;

(b) the Commission shall immediately after publication of that notification and in consultation with the Member State concerned, take steps with the authorities of the third country in order to restore visa-free travel;

(c) within 90 days after publication of that notification, the Commission, in consultation with the Member State concerned, shall report to the Council. The report may be accompanied by a proposal providing for the temporary restoration of the visa requirement for nationals of the third country in question. The Commission may also present this proposal after deliberations in Council on its report. The Council shall act on such proposal by a qualified majority within three months;

(d) if it considers it necessary, the Commission may present a proposal for the temporary restoration of the visa requirement for nationals of the third country referred to in subparagraph (c) without a prior report. The procedure provided for in subparagraph (c) shall apply to that proposal. The Member State concerned may state whether it wishes the Commission to refrain from the temporary restoration of such visa requirement without a prior report;

(e) the procedure referred to in subparagraphs (c) and (d) does not affect the Commission’s right to present a proposal amending this Regulation in order to transfer the third country concerned to Annex I. Where a temporary measure as referred to in subparagraphs (c) and (d) has been decided, the proposal amending this Regulation shall be presented by the Commission at the latest nine months after the entry into force of the temporary measure. Such a proposal shall also include provisions for lifting of temporary measures, which may have been introduced pursuant to the procedures referred to in subparagraphs (c) and (d). In the meantime the Commission will continue its efforts in order to induce the authorities of the third country in question to reinstall visa-free travel for the nationals of the Member State concerned;

(f) where the third country in question abolishes the visa requirement, the Member State shall immediately notify the Council and the Commission to that effect. The notification shall be published in the C series of the Official Journal of the European Union. Any temporary measure decided upon under subparagraph (d) shall terminate seven days after the publication in the Official Journal.

In case the third country in question has introduced a visa requirement for nationals of two or more Member States the termination of the temporary measure will only terminate after the last publication.

5. As long as visa exemption reciprocity continues not to exist with any third country listed in Annex II in relation to any of the Member States, the Commission shall report to the European Parliament and the Council before the 1 July of every even-numbered year on the situation of non-reciprocity and shall, if necessary, submit appropriate proposals.

I. General remarks

1. Introduction

Regulation 539/2001\(^1\) harmonises the lists of third countries whose citizens are required to be in possession of a visa in order to cross the external borders of the European Union;\(^2\) and of third countries whose nationals are exempt from this requirement.\(^3\) It entered into force on 10
April 2001, and has since been amended by six regulations and one Act of Accession.\(^4\)

The regulation is part of the European Union’s visa law and policy. Other measures in this field include\(^5\) rules on a uniform format of visa,\(^6\) the issue of visa at the border,\(^7\) on a visa

The EU Code on visas\textsuperscript{10} integrates most legal measures in this field (with the exception of Regulation 539/2001) and parts of the Common Consular Instructions (CCI) in one single regulation with the goal of enhancing transparency and legal certainty and of avoiding differences in the application of the rules by different Member States by closing existing legal gaps.\textsuperscript{11} So, the new Regulation establishes the procedures and conditions for issuing visas for transit through or intended stays in the territory of the Member States not exceeding three months in any six-months period.

The Common Consular Instructions (CCI) which contain detailed explanations and rules on the application process, the examination of applications, and the issuance of visas, are of particular importance in the field of visa policy. The CCI aim to harmonize the practises of the common visa rules by the Schengen states. The CCI have originally been adopted by the Schengen Executive Committee, and were later integrated into the European Union framework by the Treaty of Amsterdam as part of the Schengen acquis.\textsuperscript{12}

After the entry into force of the Treaty of Amsterdam, the Council adopted Regulation 789/2001\textsuperscript{13} which conferred power to the Council to amend almost all the rules of the CCI by means of a simplified procedure and since 2005 deciding by qualified majority voting.\textsuperscript{14} The CCI have since been modified numerous times by Council decisions and also by a number of legislative acts,\textsuperscript{15} and consolidated versions have been published in the Official Journal.\textsuperscript{16}

At least these modifications are to be considered binding as EU law (as provisions of a decision or regulation) since they have been adopted in the correct form and according to the procedure prescribed in the Treaty. The legal effects of the other provisions that have not been modified and of the totality of the CCI remain, however, unclear. Their legal effects have not been clearly defined in the decision of the incorporation of the Schengen acquis, and the CCI have up to date not been replaced in its entirety by a legislative act of the European Union.

The CCI do not conform to any of the legal forms listed in art. 288 TFEU, but this does not change the fact that they are binding for the authorities of the Member States that are applying them (i.e. the diplomatic missions and consular posts). They have been integrated into the framework of the European Union by the Treaty of Amsterdam, and since only been amended by legal acts of the European Union, which speaks in favour of their binding legal power. It would, however, serve legal certainty if the binding character of the CCI were clearly stated.

2. Territorial scope

Regulation 539/2001 is applicable to Denmark, but not to the UK and Ireland. Based on agreements concluded with Norway, Iceland, and Switzerland on their association to the Schengen acquis, the regulation is also applicable to these non-EU Member states. The principality of Liechtenstein is planning to join the Schengen area in the near future.

3. Purpose

The visa law and policy are – in comparison with other fields covered by art. 77 et seqq. TFEU – of a rather technical character. It is therefore not very surprising that the Member States could already agree at a quite early point in time on the basic concepts of a common visa policy, and established not only a legal basis in the EC Treaty in 1992 but have also adopted secondary measures acting on that basis rather speedily. Regulation 539/2001 is an important part of the visa policy establishing a „negative list“ (states whose nationals are required to be in possession of a visa) and a „positive list“ (states whose nationals are exempt from that requirement).

23 Cf. also the remarks on the drafting history, II.
The visa policy is furthermore closely connected to the realization of the common market and the removal of controls at internal borders since an individual who is granted entry into one Schengen state can afterwards freely move into the territories of the other Schengen states. The common visa policy shall also help combating illegal migration: The establishment of a “negative list” which requires nationals of a majority of third states to apply for a visa allows a shift of the examination whether the legal conditions for entry are fulfilled away from the actual frontiers to the diplomatic missions and consular post in the country of origin or legal residence. The hope is that by reducing the number of persons who would eventually present themselves at the actual external borders, the number of persons entering the Schengen area illegally could also be reduced.\textsuperscript{24} If and to what extent the establishment of “negative” visa lists is an efficient means of combating illegal migration would have to be examined empirically - an endeavour that would by its very nature meet significant practical difficulties. Furthermore it has to be considered that visa requirements can constitute high administrative obstacles for the persons concerned, and can result – especially for persecuted persons or persons in need – in the actual impossibility of fleeing from persecution or of getting the (for example medical) help needed.\textsuperscript{25}

4. Direct applicability and individual rights

Regulation 539/2001 has because of its very nature as regulation direct effect in the Member States and its provisions must be applied by the national authorities. The responsible national authorities must refer to the rule established in art. 1 Regulation 539/2001 when deciding whether a person needs a visa in order to enter the Member State concerned. Nevertheless, it needs to be pointed out that certain provisions of Regulation 539/2001 require implementation measures at the national level. This is the case with respect to art. 4 Regulation 539/2001 – that allows Member States to provide for exceptions for certain groups of persons – as well as with respect to the determination of the national authority responsible for the application of this regulation (art. 5; furthermore and going beyond this provision, the responsible authority for the examination of visa applications and the actual issuance of visas also need to be determined).

If and to what extent certain provisions of this regulation grant individual rights is of particular importance for persons who according to art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 in conjunction with Annex I are exempt from the visa requirement. The European Court of

Justice has in its rulings protected individual rights flowing from EU law in cases where the provisions of EU law also aim at the protection of the interest of the individual,\(^\text{26}\) irrespective of the question if the actual wording of the rule stated a corresponding obligation of the Member States. The question whether a certain provision of primary law, of a directive or a regulation establishes individual rights needs in principle be answered by applying the same criteria.\(^\text{27}\)

With this in mind, it becomes clear that art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 in particular establishes individual rights: According to this provision, nationals of certain states are exempt from the visa requirement, which clearly protects the interest of individuals since the concerned individuals may have a great interest in visa-free travel into the Schengen area. This conclusion is in no way affected by the fact that the beneficiaries are not determined by individual criteria but on the basis of the rather formal criteria of their nationality. There is no reason why individual rights might not also be established by using such formal criteria for delimiting the group of individuals concerned. Individuals can therefore invoke this right if they are refused entry into the Schengen area (solely) based on the lack of a visa – despite the fact that they are exempt from the visa requirement. They must be given the possibility to invoke this right before a court.

These principles have to be considered in the context of art. 5 Regulation 562/2006 (Schengen Borders Code)\(^\text{28}\) that establishes the conditions of entry into the Schengen area: Independent of whether that provision grants a right of entry if its conditions are fulfilled,\(^\text{29}\) art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 in conjunction with art. 5 para. 1 Regulation 562/2006 prohibits the refusal of entry on the basis of the lack of visa that the individual is not required to be in possession of according to Regulation 539/2001.

\(^\text{27}\) See on this extensively Epiney, Primär- und Sekundärrechtsschutz im Öffentlichen Recht, Vereinigung der Deutschen Staatsrechtslehrer 2002 (61), p. 361, 386 et seqq.

It is obvious that the possession of a visa for nationals of states listed in Annex I alone does not imply the right of entry; entry into the Schengen area may only be granted if the other requirements stated in art. 5 Regulation 562/2006 are met as well.30

With respect to those third country nationals that need a visa (art. 1 para. 1 Regulation 539/2001) the issue is raised if they can invoke a “right to be issued a visa”. On the basis of Regulation 539/2001 the answer to this question has to be in the negative, since the regulation only establishes which third country nationals need a visa and which do not, but does not contain the conditions for the issuance of visas. Even though the Member States have quite a large margin of discretion when deciding on the issuance of visas, they need to respect the limits put on the exercise of that discretion by EU law, and especially by the fundamental rights recognized in EU law (as for example the prohibition of discrimination).31 If a visa applicant invokes the violation of a fundamental right, he has the right to a legal remedy as the fundamental rights clearly codify individual rights.

II. Drafting history

As part of the harmonization and strengthening of external borders control, the 1985 Schengen Agreement32 contained in its art. 7 an obligation for the State parties to approximate their visa policies.33 The 1990 Convention implementing the 1985 Schengen Agreement (hereinafter: Schengen Implementation Convention, SIC)34 provided for common conditions to be fulfilled by third country nationals wanting to cross the external borders for a stay of up to three months (art. 5 SIC).35 Title II, Chapter 3 (art.s 9 et seqq. SIC) contained a more detailed obligation for the State parties to harmonise their visa policy (art. 9 SIC)36 and to introduce a uniform visa valid for the territories of all State parties (art. 10 et seqq. SIC). Detailed rules for the issuance of Schengen Visa pursuant to Chapter 3 SIC were agreed upon by the participating states and laid down in the Common Consular Instructions on visas for the diplomatic missions and consular posts (CCI).

The 1985 Schengen Agreement and the 1990 Schengen Convention were not negotiated in the institutional framework of the EC even though all the State parties were EC Member States. It was not until the Treaty of Maastricht establishing the European Union entered into force in 1992 and declared the visa policy to be a matter of common interest, that the European Community was given the competence to adopt measures in the field of visa policy. Former Art. 100c EC Treaty conferred the power upon the European Community to adopt a common list of countries whose nationals needed to be in possession of a visa when crossing the external borders (“negative list”), and the Union first made use of this competence in 1995 by adopting Regulation 2371/1995. That regulation was annulled by the European Court of Justice for failure to consult the European Parliament. It was later replaced by Regulation 574/1999 which essentially copied the wording of the annulled regulation. In 1999, the Schengen acquis was incorporated into the Union’s framework by the Treaty of Amsterdam and a protocol annexed to the treaty. The protocol conferred the competence to the Council to implement the provisions of the protocol. The Council in a first step defined

40 At the time it was disputed if art. 100c EC Treaty of Maastricht gave the Community the competence to establish a “positive list” as well. This dispute has since been resolved by art. 62 EC Treaty, see below marg. no. 23

the exact content of the Schengen acquis,\textsuperscript{45} and then designated the new legal basis according to the Treaty of Amsterdam for each rule having been identified as forming part of the acquis.\textsuperscript{46} Compared to other areas covered by the Schengen acquis and later incorporated into the framework of the Union, this development was of less significance for the field of the common visa policy since – as mentioned above – art. 100c EC Treaty of Maastricht had already contained a (however limited) legal basis and secondary law had already been adopted prior to 1999.

The Treaty of Amsterdam established a new legal basis for the common visa policy in Title IV of the EC Treaty, art. 62 para. 2 lit. b) EC Treaty.\textsuperscript{47} According to art. 62 para. 2 lit. b) (i), the Council was to adopt within five years following the procedure of art. 67 para. 3 EC Treaty\textsuperscript{48} not only a “negative list”, but also a “positive list” of all third countries whose nationals were exempt from the visa requirement. Based on this provision, Regulation 539/2001 was adopted in March 2001.\textsuperscript{49}

Regulation 539/2001 has since been amended by a number of regulations and one Act of Accession. The following is a short overview of the most important amendments.\textsuperscript{50}

Timor from entity to state in Annex I and removed Switzerland either list as a consequence of the Agreement on the Free Movement of Persons between Switzerland, the EC and its Member States which provided for free movement without visas for nationals of Switzerland and for EU citizen.55

- The 2003 Accession Treaty56 provided for the removal of the ten new Member States from either list.
- Regulation 851/200557 introduced a new mechanism for the Commission to react to situations of non-reciprocity, for example to a third state listed in Annex II imposing a visa requirement on any of the EU Member States.58
- Regulation 1791/200659 removed Romania and Bulgaria from the positive list by the date of their accession to the Union.
- Regulation 1932/200660 transferred a number of countries from one annex to the other,61 and clarified the conditions for exemptions from the visa requirements for refugees and stateless persons, school pupils, holders of certain passports other than ordinary passports and holders of local border traffic cards according to Regulation 1931/2006.62
- Finally, with effect from 19 December 2009, Regulation 1244/200963 moved Macedonia, Montenegro and Serbia from Annex I to Annex II. For reasons of legal clarity, Kosovo was added to part 2 of Annex I, which is without prejudice to the status of Kosovo.

III. The establishment of a “negative” and a “positive” list (paras. 1 and 2)

Art. 1 paras. 1 and 2 establish the distinction between third countries listed in Annex I whose nationals need a visa when crossing the external borders of the EU (“negative list”/“black list”), and third countries listed in Annex II whose nationals are exempt from this requirement (“positive list”/“white list”).

Annex I currently includes 126 states and three territorial entities, Annex II lists 37 countries and two special administrative regions of the Republic of China (SAR Hongkong and SAR Macao). The regulation fully harmonises these two lists for the participating Member States of the EU and states associated to the Schengen area (recital (12) Regulation 539/2001); the lists annexed to the regulation are exhaustive.65

IV. Refugees and Stateless Persons Lawfully Residing in a “negative list”-Country

Refugees and stateless persons who lawfully reside in a country listed in Annex I also need a visa when crossing the external borders according to art. 1 para. 1 subpara. 2, unless the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees (hereinafter: 1959 Agreement)66 provides otherwise.67

The 1959 Agreement entered into force in 1969 and has currently been ratified by 22 States that are members of the Council of Europe.68 According to art. 1 of the 1959 Agreement, refugees who are lawfully resident in the territory of a Contracting Party to the Agreement have the right – subject to reciprocity - to enter the territory of another Contracting Party without being obligated to obtain a visa, if they hold valid travel documents issued by the country of residence (art. 1 para. 1 lit. a) and the duration of their visit does not exceed three months (art. 1 para. 1 lit. b).

The reservation of the provisions of the 1959 Agreement is of little relevance today, since all but a few Contracting Parties to the 1959 Agreement are either Member States of the Union fully applying the Schengen rules, or associate members of the Schengen acquis, and the recognized refugees residing in their territories are exempt from the visa requirement under art. 1 para. 2 subpara. 2, third indent of Regulation 539/2001.

Of the 27 EU Member States, only the United Kingdom and Ireland are not bound by Regulation 539/2001,⁶⁹ but have ratified the 1959 Agreement. The United Kingdom has, however, suspended the application of the 1959 Agreement in 2003.

Romania has also ratified the 1959 Agreement, but – even though it is an EU Member State and bound by Regulation 539/2001 – has not yet fully entered the Schengen area. The country is expected to become a full Schengen member in 2010-2011.

V. Nationals of “negative list” – countries who are automatically exempt from the visa requirement (para. 2 subpara. 2)

In certain cases, nationals of third countries listed in Annex I are automatically exempt from the visa requirement. Art. 1 para. 2 subpara. 2 mentions three categories of persons:

- First indent: Persons who are holders of local border traffic cards pursuant to Regulation 1931/2006.⁷⁰

Regulation 1931/2006 introduces a local border traffic permit⁷¹ in derogation from the general rules governing the control of the external borders,⁷² since it is considered to be in the interest of the European Union to ensure that the borders with the neighbouring states do not constitute a barrier to trade, social and cultural interchange and regional cooperation.⁷³

Third country nationals who would normally be required to be in possession of a visa according to Regulation 539/2001 but who are regularly crossing the external borders in order to stay in a border area which does not extend to more than 30 kilometres from the border may qualify for a local border traffic card.

In addition to the general entry and issuance conditions in Chapter III of Regulation 1931/2006, bilateral agreements concluded by the Member States shall implement this regulation and lay down specific rules governing for example the maximum duration of stay under the local traffic regime.

- Second indent: School pupils who are nationals of a country listed in Annex I but who are legally residing in an EU Member State and cross the border of another Member State for the purpose of a school excursion.

  Council Decision 94/795/JHA lays down conditions under which school pupils are exempt from the general visa requirement attached to the country of their nationality: The pupil must be legally residing in a Member State, possess a valid travel document and be travelling as a member of a group of school pupils that is accompanied by a teacher from the school. The accompanying teacher must be able to provide a list of the pupils and to document the purpose of the intended stay.

- Third indent: Recognised refugees and stateless person who are legally residing in an EU Member State or an associate Schengen state.

Since the Council adopted its decision on school pupils in 1994, the EU has significantly improved the legal position of third country nationals who are legally residing in an EU Member State in general and in the area of the right to travel within the Schengen area in particular. According to art. 5 para. 1 lit. b) of Regulation 562/2006, nationals of third countries listed in Annex I do therefore not need a visa to cross the external borders or the (internal) border of another Member state if they hold a valid residence permit issued by an EU Member State or an associate Schengen Member as listed in Annex IV of the CCI. Nevertheless, these exemptions from the visa requirement in art. 1 para. 2 subpara. 2, second and third indent Regulation 539/2001 were and are in certain cases still relevant during the transition period of new Member States as long as they are not yet full Schengen members and their visas and residence permits are not yet recognized as equivalent. Even once a state is fully applying the Schengen rules, the exemption in art. 1 para. 2 subpara. 2, second indent can also be relevant for school pupils that are seeking asylum or international protection, since the residence permit that are issued to this category of persons does usually not entitle the holders to visa-free travel within the Schengen area in general.

VI. Visa requirements in the event of state successions (para. 3)

Art. 1 para. 3 establishes a rule for the event that third countries listed in Annex I or II should break apart: The new successor state will automatically be listed in the same Annex as the former state until the Council decides otherwise by amending Regulation 539/2001.

Following the declaration of independence of Montenegro of 3 June 2006, the visa requirement applicable to the former state continued to apply. In December 2006, the Council amended Annex I by art. 1 para. 4 lit. a) (iv) of Regulation 1932/2006 and the reference to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was replaced by references to “Serbia” and “Montenegro”. Both states have since been moved to Annex II.

In the most recent case, the declaration of independence of Kosovo in February 2008, the European Union has yet to take an official position towards Kosovo’s status. Before Regulation 1244/2009 was adopted in November 2009, the visa requirement imposed on the former state – i.e. Serbia – continued to apply for nationals of Kosovo according to the rule set out in art. 1 para. 3 Regulation 539/2001. Art. 1 para. 1 lit. b) Regulation 1244/2009 then moved Kosovo to part 2 of Annex I (“entities and territorial authorities that are not recognised as states by at least one Member State”), whereas Serbia was moved to Annex II.

VII. Mechanism for the temporary restoration of the visa requirement in cases of non-reciprocity (paras. 4 and 5)

Art. 1 paras. 4 and 5 Regulation 539/2001 expresses the great importance Member States attach to the criteria of by establishing mechanism for a temporary restoration of the visa requirement if a country listed in Annex II re-imposes such a requirement for nationals of any EU Member State.

83 Art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 1244/2009
This mechanism was introduced by art. 1 of Regulation 851/2005, and replaced the original mechanism established by Regulation 539/2001 that had proven to be ineffective and that had never been applied.\(^\text{85}\)

Former art. 1 para. 4 Regulation 539/2001 provided that the Member State subjected to a visa requirement by a third country listed in Annex II could notify the Commission. The visa requirement for nationals of that third state would then have to be re-established provisionally by all Member States unless the Council would decide otherwise acting by qualified majority. The re-introduction of the visa requirement was to be published in the Official Journal, and the Council and any Member State were given the right to request an amendment of the annexes of Regulation 539/2001 in order to move the third country to Annex I.

The original mechanism turned out to be too rigid and failed to recognize the political dimension of reciprocity and the negative implications for external relations the practically automatic re-establishment of the visa requirement by all Member States could have.\(^\text{86}\)

According to art. 1 para. 4 lit. a), the Member State concerned has to notify the Council and the Commission of the introduction of the visa requirement within 90 days and this information is to be published in the Official Journal. The obligatory notification and publication of the introduction of the visa requirement are aimed at making information about a non-reciprocal situation automatic and transparent.\(^\text{87}\) The Commission will then – in consultation with the concerned Member State – enter into negotiations with the third country in order to restore visa-free travel (art. 1 para. 4 lit. b) Regulation 539/2001). After 90 days, the Commission shall present a report to the Council. The Commission may also present a proposal to temporarily restore the visa requirement for nationals of the third country on which the Council shall then act within three months acting with qualified majority (art. 1 para. 4 lit. c), d) Regulation 539/2001). If the third country abolishes the visa requirement again, the Member State concerned is to immediately notify the Council and the Commission. Seven days after the publication of this notification, any temporary restoration adopted under art. 1 para. 4 lit. c), d) Regulation 539/2001 shall terminate.

Art. 1 para. 5 Regulation 539/2001 obliges the Commission to submit a report to the Parliament and the Council every other year on any situation of non-reciprocity and to submit proposals for the amendment of Regulation 539/2001 if deemed necessary.

Since the entry into force of this new mechanism on 24 June 2005, the number of non-reciprocity cases between a third state listed in Annex II and one or more EU Member States or Schengen associates has fallen significantly and the diplomatic approach of the new mechanism has proven to be effective.

Article 2
For the purposes of this Regulation, "visa" shall mean an authorisation issued by a Member State or a decision taken by such State which is required with a view to:
- entry for an intended stay in that Member State or in several Member States of no more than three months in total,
- entry for transit through the territory of that Member State or several Member States, except for transit at an airport.

I. Definition of ‘visa’

Art. 2 defines the notion of “visa” for the purpose of Regulation 539/2001 as a authorisation that entitles the holder for an entry into and sojourn in the Schengen area for a maximum of three months (art. 2 first indent).

Excluded from the scope of application of Regulation 539/2001 are therefore residence titles for longer stays; the competence to regulate entries and stays of more than three months remains with the Member States.

Nevertheless, the provisions of Directive 2003/109 need to be taken into account. Directive 2003/109 regulates the legal status of third country nationals who are long-term residents in a Member State, and approaches their legal status to the status of Union citizen (recital para. 2, Directive 2003/109) with the goal of strengthening the integration of third country nationals that have been legally residing in the EU for a longer period of time. The directive regulates the conditions under which the status of a long-term resident in a Member State shall be given to or can be withdrawn from a third country national, as well as the rights attached to that status. The directive also contains rules on the status in Member States other than the one of which the third country national has been a long-term resident (art. 1 Directive 2003/109).

Directive 2003/109 does only apply to third country nationals that have been legally residing in a Member State for at least five years. The „first decision“ of a Member

State to admit a third country national to its territory for more than three months remains in the competence of the Member State and is also not affected by Directive 2003/109.

II. Transit visas and airport transit visas

A visa within the meaning of art. 2 also includes the authorisation to transit through the territory of at least one Schengen state by land, but excludes transit at airports (art. 2 second indent).

The exception of airport transit visas is a result of a controversy about the scope of the competence conferred upon the EC by former art. 100c para. 1 EC Treaty. The Commission and the European Parliament held the view that rules on airport transit visas were covered by art. 100c para. 1, the Council on the other hand disagreed and proceeded to adopt the Joint Action on airport transit agreements.\(^9^1\) The Commission sought to annul the Joint Action, the European Court of Justice, however, supported the Council’s view and upheld the Joint Action.\(^9^2\)

The Member States (including the United Kingdom and Ireland) remain bound by the Joint Action of 1996. At the Schengen level (and therefore excluding the U.K. and Ireland), the states could agree on a “negative list” of third country nationals that need an airport transit visa.\(^9^3\) This list is found in Annex III of the Common Consular Instructions and was last amended on 9 February 2009. Certain Schengen states have waived the requirement for airport transit visa for nationals of selected third countries listed in Annex I of Regulation 539/2001 if they hold a valid visa for an EU Member State, an EEA Member State, Canada, Japan, Switzerland or the United States of America.\(^9^4\)

Art. 3 has been repealed by art. 1 para. 2 of Regulation 1932/2006. Regulation 1932/2006 moved the content of former art. 3 to the present art. 1 para. 1 subpara. 2, and Art. 1 para. 2, subpara. 2, third indent.

1. A Member State may provide for exceptions from the visa requirement provided for by Article 1(1) or from the exemption from the visa requirement provided for by Article 1(2) as regards:
   (a) holders of diplomatic passports, service/official passports or special passports in accordance with one of the procedures laid down in Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of Regulation (EC) No 789/2001 of 24 April 2001 reserving to the Council implementing powers with regard to certain detailed provisions and practical procedures for examining visa applications;
   (b) civilian air and sea crew;
   (c) the flight crew and attendants on emergency or rescue flights and other helpers in the event of disaster or accident;
   (d) the civilian crew of ships navigating in international waters;
   (e) the holders of laissez-passer issued by some intergovernmental international organisations to their officials.

2. A Member State may exempt from the visa requirement:
   (a) a school pupil having the nationality of a third country listed in Annex I who resides in a third country listed in Annex II or in Switzerland and Liechtenstein and is travelling in the context of a school excursion as a member of a group of school pupils accompanied by a teacher from the school in question;
   (b) recognised refugees and stateless persons if the third country where they reside and which issued their travel document is one of the third countries listed in Annex II;
   (c) members of the armed forces travelling on NATO or Partnership for Peace business and holders of identification and movement orders provided for by the Agreement of 19 June 1951 between the Parties to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation regarding the status of their forces.

3. A Member State may provide for exceptions from the exemption from the visa requirement provided for in Article 1(2) as regards persons carrying out a paid activity during their stay.

Art. 4 para. 1 authorises Member States to derogate from the lists in Annex I and II and provide for exceptions to the visa requirements or the exemptions thereof as provided in art. 1 paras. 1 and 2 Regulation 539/2001 for certain categories of persons. The exceptions in art. 4 are formulated in a non-binding manner (Member States “may” exempt) and it is up to the Member States if they will make use of them – in contrast to the binding exceptions provided for in art. 1 para. 1 subpara. 2 and art. 1 para. 2 (Member States “shall” exempt).

Art. 4 para. 1 authorises exceptions to the visa requirements and the lifting thereof, whereas art. 4 para. 2 governs the lifting of the visa requirement and art. 4 para. 3 the possibility of re-introduction of such a requirement. The lifting of the visa requirement by one Member States for a national of a third country listed in Annex I must be recognized by the other Schengen states and result in the right to also freely enter their territories.

II. The implications of the principle of equality for the application of art. 4

The question needs to be asked if there are certain limits to the exercise of the discretion given to the Member States by art. 4, especially with respect to the lifting of the visa requirement for certain persons or certain groups of persons. Does the equality principle have to respected in this context so that it is to be avoided that the visa requirement is lifted in one situation and not in a similar case?

The point of departure for answering this question must be the principle that the fundamental rights recognized in European Union law (including the principle of equality and the prohibition of discrimination) must also be respected when applying EU law, and when exercising a certain margin of discretion given to the Member States by EU law.

In the present case, two considerations may be decisive:

- First of all, the wording of art. 4 para. 1 favours the conclusion that the legislator wanted to provide for the possible lifting of the visa requirement for certain groups of persons and not only for certain individuals. The Member States can exempt entire

5 In other language versions the wording is even clearer. As an example, the German version uses in art. 4 para. 1 „Personengruppen“ (groups of persons).
groups that fulfil the conditions mentioned from the visa requirement. An exemption of only some arbitrarily determined individuals of these groups would, however, violate the principle of equality.

- The same conclusion is applicable to the rules in art. 4 para. 2: The persons exempt from the visa requirement are to be determined in a manner that respects the principle of equality.

Against this background, a differential treatment of an individual is only justifiable by reasons that lie in the person or his or her behaviour as for example in cases when the person constitutes a risk to public order or security. This conclusion is a result of applying the fundamental rights recognized by EU law (cf. also art. 6 par. 1 TEU which includes the charter of Human rights into the framework of the European Union). Art. 4 grants individual rights as well as art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 and for the same reasons as discussed above. Individuals concerned by an arbitrary application of the possible exceptions provided for in art. 4 must therefore be given the possibility to invoke a violation of these individual rights before the competent courts in the Member States.

III. Categories of persons for which Member States may provide derogations from the rules established in art. 1 (para. 1)

Art. 4 para. 1 authorises Member States to derogate from the lists in Annex I and II and provide for exceptions to the visa requirements or the exemptions thereof as provided in art. 1 paras. 1 and. 2 for certain categories of persons:

- Art. 4 para. 1 lit. a): Holders of diplomatic passports, service/official passports or special passports.

Regulation 1932/2006 clarified that exemptions for this category of persons have to be introduced by following the procedures laid down in art. 1 and 2 of Regulation 789/2001.

6 See commentary on art. 1, marg. no. 12 et seqq.
Annex II of the Common Consular Instructions lays down special regulations for the holders of these types of passports, and generally speaking eases the restrictions on their right to enter and to move within the Schengen area on certain conditions. Schedule A and B of Annex II to the CCI list the visa requirements or the exemptions thereof for holders of such passports by each Schengen state. Art. 4 para. 1 lit. b)-e): The Member States may also derogate from the rules established by art. 1 paras. 1 and 2 with respect to civilian air and sea crew in general (art. 4 para. 1 lit. b) and/ or in the event of emergency, other helpers in the event of disaster or accident (art. 4 para. 1 lit. c), civilian crews of ships in international waters (art. 4 para. 1 lit. d) and officials of international organisations who are holders of a laissez-passer issued by said organisations (art. 4 para. 1 lit. e). For these exceptions, the Member States are not required to follow the procedures of Regulation 789/2001. The CCI do not contain any common rules regarding these categories of persons.

IV. Categories of persons that may be exempted from the visa requirement (para. 2)

Art. 4 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 originally authorised Members States only to provide for exemptions from the visa requirement for school pupils travelling with a school group from a “positive list” country. Art. 1 para. 3 lit. b) of Regulation 1932/2006 amended this provision and it now authorises the Member States to exempt from the visa requirement three categories of persons:

- Art. 4 para. 2 lit. a): School pupils who are nationals of a “negative list” – country but reside in a third country listed in Annex II and cross the border of another Schengen state for a school excursion. This provision authorises Member States to provide for exceptions parallel to the one in art. 1 para. 2 second indent. Whereas according to the latter provision school pupils who reside in a Member State are automatically exempt, Member States are free to decide whether they also want to exempt school pupils who reside in a third country listed in Annex II. Regulation 539/2001 does not lay down any specific conditions for the exemption, but it would be expected that the same conditions as provided for in Council Decision 94/795/JHA would be applied.9

- Art. 4 para. 2 lit. b): Recognized refugees and stateless persons residing lawfully in a third country listed in Annex II may also be exempted from the visa requirement.

Agreement\textsuperscript{10} whose scope of application was extended by the 1995 N.A.T.O. and Partnership for Peace Agreement\textsuperscript{11} exempts armed forces on such missions from visa regulations on entering the territory of a receiving state. The signatory states to these agreements\textsuperscript{12} must comply with these exemptions, and a reference to these agreements has therefore been introduced by art. 1 para. 3 lit. b) Regulation 1932/2006 on the grounds of clarity and legal certainty.\textsuperscript{13}

In order to benefit from the exemption from the visa requirements, the persons in question must hold an identification card and a movement order issued by an agency of the sending state or the N.A.T.O. as stipulated in art. III para. 2 of the 1951 N.A.T.O. Agreement.

V. Possible imposition of visa requirements on persons carrying out paid activities (para. 3)

Art. 4 para. 3 allows Member States to derogate from art. 1 para. 2 Regulation 539/2001 and impose visa requirements on nationals of third countries listed in Annex II if they are carrying out a paid activity during their stay.

Art. 5-8 contain the final provisions. Of importance are in particular art. 5 and 6, whereas art. 7 and 8 contain the above-mentioned amendments of the CCI, and the entry into force of the regulation.

II. Communication of derogations made by individual Member States (art. 5)

Art. 5 para. 1 should read «measures they have taken pursuant to art. 1 para. 1, subpara. 2, and Art. 1 para. 2, subpara. 2, third indent and art. 4”. As mentioned above, art. 3 has been repealed and its content moved to art. 1.

The provision is of great importance as it is expedient and necessary that all Member States are informed accurately of the measures taken by the other participating states as the lifting of the visa requirement or the re-introduction thereof has effect for all Schengen States.

III. The recognition of states and of foreign travel documents (art. 6)

Art. 6 clarifies that the regulation only governs the visa requirements or the exemptions thereof; the competence of recognition of other states or entities remains of course with the Member States – notwithstanding the cooperation in the area of external relations.

The recognition of foreign passports or other documents is also not affected by Regulation 539/2001. This provision can, however, have the rather bizarre effect that certain travel documents will be recognised by the authorities of one Member State whereas the authorities of another Member States would not recognise them, which might result in different decisions on the right to enter the Schengen area depending on which Member State will decide on the visa application.

In such situation the question arises if a Schengen visa affixed to a document of a state or territorial entity that is not recognized by all Member States will still entitle the holder of that document or passport for visa free travel in the entire Schengen area including the territories of Member States that do explicitly not recognize the state or territory of origin. The answer has to be in the affirmative as it would be pointless to otherwise even list such states or entities in the annexes of Regulation 539/2001.

List of Contents:

I. Two exhaustive lists.................................................................1-4
II. The criteria for adding a country to the positive or negative list.......................5-6
III. Compatibility with EC Primary Law principles ........................................7-9

I. Two exhaustive lists

The two lists in Annex I and Annex II are exhaustive, each state and certain territorial entities are attributed to either one of the lists. As of 10 January 2010, Annex I lists 126 states and three territorial entities not recognized as states by all Member States, Annex II lists 37 countries and two special administrative regions of the Republic of China (SAR Hongkong and SAR Macao).108

Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein are not listed in Annex II even though their nationals are exempted from the visa requirement. The visa exemption for these three countries flows from the agreement on the European Economic Area.109

Switzerland was deleted from either list by art. 1 para. 2 of Regulation 453/2003 since the Agreement on the Free Movement of Persons between Switzerland, the EC and the Member States110 provides for free movement without visas for nationals of Switzerland and of the Member States.

108 For a geographical overview of the countries in Annex I and II see Peers/Rogers, Visa Lists, p. 186 et seq.

109 Decision 94/1/EC, ECSC of the Council and the Commission of 13 December 1993 on the conclusion of the Agreement on the European Economic Area between the European Communities, their Member States and the Republic of Austria, the Republic of Finland, the Republic of Iceland, the Principality of Liechtenstein, the Kingdom of Norway, the Kingdom of Sweden and the Swiss Confederation, OJ L 1/1 (1994). See also Peers/Rogers, Visa Lists, p. 186.

110 Agreement between the European Community and its Member States, of the one part, and the Swiss Confederation, of the other, on the free movement of persons, OJ L 114/6 (2002).
Taking into account the 27 EU Member States, the three EEA states and Switzerland that are not mentioned in either annex, Regulation 539/2001 lays down rules for 194 states, three territorial entities and two special administrative regions.

II. The criteria for adding a country to the positive or negative list

The criteria based on which a third country will be added to the negative list in Annex I or the positive list in Annex II are not found in art. 77 para. 2 a) TFEU itself. The decision to add them to either list is therefore clearly of a political nature.\(^{111}\)

According to recital 5 of Regulation 539/2001 the determination is governed by a “case-by-case assessment of a variety of criteria, relating inter alia to illegal migration, public policy and security, and to the European Unions external relations with third countries, consideration also being given to implications of regional coherence and reciprocity.” The proposal to Regulation 539/2001, however, simply incorporated the lists almost in their entirety that the Schengen states had already agreed upon on an intergovernmental level, which contradicts the stipulation of a case-by-case assessment of each third country.\(^{112}\)

III. Compatibility with EU Primary Law principles

The division of the third countries into two groups should, however, be compatible with primary law: the EU legislator has to respect the principle of proportionality according to art. 5 para. 4 TEU, and further also needs to respect the EU’s fundamental rights including the principle of equality and the principle of non-discrimination when adopting new pieces of legislation. In this field, the EU legislator has, however, a rather large margin of discretion, especially in view of the close connection between the attribution of the third states to either list and the very politically charged area of the Union’s external relations.

Against this background, the classification itself does not appear to be in violation of the above-mentioned principles of primary law, even though it implies a distinction of certain groups of persons from others independent of the individuals’ characteristics. Nevertheless, a more detailed statement of grounds for the attribution of a state to either list should be considered: If the requirement of visas should actually reduce illegal immigration (which seems to be one of the objectives of this regulation, cf. recital 5 of Regulation 539/2001), it would be recommendable to give reasons for the assessment that there was a high risk of illegal immigration from certain third countries and not from others, and if necessary what other factors were decisive for the attribution of a state to Annex I or II.

In view of the above mentioned rather large margin of discretion of the EU legislator as well as the rather low standard that the ECJ applies when examining the stated reasons on which the secondary measures are based (art. 296 TFEU), Regulation 539/2001 should be considered to be in conformity with primary law.

114 Very sceptical of the conformity with primary law are, however, Rogers/Peers, Visa Lists, p. 197 et seqq.
